contents

editorial

esb on fitzwilliam street
CATHAL O'NEILL

competitions
FAGAN KELLY LYSAGHT

ideas and innovation,
competition and research
ROLAND BOSBACH

in praise of competitions
DERMOT BOYD

kevin kieran award
ANTOINETTE O'NEILL

deepened and extended practice
ELIZABETH HATZ

residence for the taoiseach
ZAHA HADID

ahgi headquarters
MC CULLOUGH MULVIN

extension to the nietzsche archive
MARTIN HENCHION

walsall art gallery
SHAY CLEARY ARCHITECTS

ballymun regeneration
GRACE KEELEY+MICHAEL PIKE

affordable apartment blocks
HENEGHAN PENG ARCHITECTS

reviews

crid, ucd
ROBERT PAYNE

scale and façade in county limerick
MICHEAL DE SIÚN

measure
AOIBHEANN NÍ MHEARÁIN

the natural and the artificial IRENE KELLY

the urban institute, ucd
MICHAEL CULLINAN

forthcoming
At a school sports day, whether as participant or as spectator, one of the most challenging and enjoyable events is the three-legged race. Competitors, inextricably linked, career down the field: one arm embracing their partner’s shoulder, one leg bound tightly to their partner’s at the ankle. The other arm flails the air; the other leg, loose and free, paves the way, marking the course of the ground to be covered. The speed of this motion, this progress, brings an indescribable feeling of freedom and rootedness, of searching and connection all at once.

The Competition is the architect’s three-legged race. The architectural imagination is fired up, awakening ideas with the sense of possibility—the unfettered leg is fully in action, exploring a way. But our development, our history, comes too—our other leg is bound to our progressive understandings—it is our fuel, our power engine.

Beyond this personal scale, on the scale of community, Building Material provides a platform for charting the growth and development of our architectural culture in Ireland. The activities of the AAI—the lecture series, the site visits, the awards and the publications all stimulate and promote debate and interaction among architects and the wider community. Building Material endeavours to reinforce, sustain and expand these conversations. As appears on the back cover of each issue of Building Material, the AAI aims to provide a ‘medium of friendly communication between members and others interested in the progress of architecture’. In such a vein, I welcome and strongly encourage response, reaction to and comment on the work of Building Material—its content and aspirations. Such a forum for debate has huge potential for an architectural community the size of Ireland, and is very important for the progress and further development of our country’s architectural culture. I ask you all, the members of the AAI and the readers of Building Material, to contribute to this developing discourse—to fuel the dialogue, to power the understandings of our communal leg.