

Research Highlights

- Describes how students from underrepresented groups balance study, practice, family life and work demands.
- Has global relevance for curriculum designers in developing structures to support individual student centred engagement.
- The findings have relevance for Nursing and Midwifery Board and government agencies regarding curriculum standards and requirements